Abstract

The present invention relates to a system and method for presenting both forms and content in a browser. The invention includes a Java applet having a graphical user interface that receives and projects HTML content to the user. By being able to combine both forms and non-forms content in a single interface, a tighter integration of information is achieved. Further, form content is maintained during navigation though storing active forms in a workbench.

5